Overview

Join our MPH Program and our one-of-a-kind concentration that provides instruction at the intersection of health and the U.S. justice system.

The Public Health Program mission is to develop outstanding public health professionals who understand that health is a human right and that health inequity must be addressed in collaboration with communities and with an understanding of the historical roots and structural causes of injustice.

The new faculty member will support the Program mission and will incorporate it as the ethos to frame program instruction, service and scholarly activity. This faculty position will hold an appointment in the Health Equity and Criminal Justice (HECJ) Concentration which will include instruction for the core MPH course in Health Policy and Management for all MPH students, and courses in the HECJ concentration, including “Criminal Justice Law and Advocacy. “

We seek a colleague whose teaching, service and research interests include understanding public health policy and management as a core foundation for health professionals; and experience and understanding of the intersection of health and the U.S. justice system on individuals, families and communities through a public health lens. We are especially interested in qualified candidates that will contribute fully to the diversity and excellence of our academic community. with a demonstrated commitment through their research, teaching, and service

Responsibilities

- Be involved in extramurally funded, community-based multidisciplinary research ;
- Provide academic advising to students;
- Participate on TUC and Public Health Program specific committees;
- Participate in community partnerships and collaborations;
- Participate the development and maintenance of practice sites;
- Provide service/outreach to the public health community; and
- Maintain currency in the area of training where teaching and research occur.
